Thailand's exports, the foundation of its modern economy, have pulled the country out of recession and with four per cent GDP growth projected for the year ahead, the government has announced a long overdue reform of the Thai Customs Dept. As a key hub of the Asian and ASEAN region, the practical realities of operating businesses here, however, remain complex. Tax audits may still be applied retroactively, conflicts and dispute resolution with customs remain protracted and opaque affairs. Duty free zones are growing and Thailand's Double-Taxation Agreement with Hong Kong has already begun. Moreover, as the region prepares for the ASEAN Single Economic Community in 2015, preceded this year by changes to VAT and tax structures, further legislative changes are set to come online - for which many industries and government departments are not yet ready.

Combining the expertise of four industry leaders and Thai tax advisory professionals, Irving Seminar & Training provides your business with the practical, crucial, inside track on all issues related to transfer pricing, customs and international tax planning.
